strong in numbers, until now they fill up a very respectable rural voting precinct,

But at last, after living in unity for generation, the Arns have finally landed in the circuit court, and extended litigation is threatened. Ferdinand and Cornelius Arn were brothers and the progenitors of the colony. Cornelius died seventeen years ago, holding an insurance policy for $1,124, paya Miller, a relative who lived in Ohio up to the time of her death last April. Five years before his death, however, Cornelius, being unable to keep up the premiums, asked his brother, Ferdinand, to pay the premiums on the policy, and Ferdinand paid them for twenty-two years, paying out something like $1,300 on the policy.

When Cornelius died, his six children were all small, and Ferdinand took their

When Cornelius died, his six children were all small, and Ferdinand took their father's place, contributing from time to time to the support of his brother's family. During all these years there was no objection made to his paying the premiums on the Miller insurance policy, and no administrator was ever appointed, the estate being a very small one. But when Mrs. Miller died last spring, the sons of Corneilus, who had grown to manhood, had E. C. Arn, a son of Corneilus, appointed administrator, and to him the insurance policy was paid.

The uncle, Ferdinand Arn, who had been paying the premiums on the policy for so many years, brought suit yesterday against the administrator and the rest of the family to recover the amount of his premiums. He considers that he is entitled to the policy by reason of having paid the premiums for a generation.

Another piece of litigation over the Arn estate is in the probate court. When Cornelius Arn died he left his family in almost destitute circumstances. The uncle, Ferd Arn, helped the family from time to time while the children were growing up, and saw that they did not suffer. There are six children, and as they grew up they prospered, until now the family is in good circumstances. Ferd Arn now puts in a ciaim against the estate for $620, the amount of his advances. Four of the six children favor allowing their uncle's claim, but the oldest two sons resist it, claiming that the assistance rendered the family was in the nature of gifts and not loans. Attorney Grant I. Rosensweig is vigorously pushing both claims.

Norton and D. Sisson. Mr. Sisson recognized a cob pipe in the possession of a stranger as his "oldest and strongest friend," which he had lost along with the clothing. The man was arrested, but protested that the pipe was a gift, and furnished information which not only led the officers to the giver, but also to the clothes, which Coleman had pawned.

The defendant's story was that he had sold the suits on commission for a friend, receiving as his share only one-third of the price, or 50 cents, but the evidence of the pipe was too strong for him, and yesterday Justice Walls gave him ninety days in jail on each count. Coleman is an old member of the Sheffield Tammany Hall, but has lately been in poor standing.

PEARSONS HEARING BEGINS.

SO FAR LACKS THE LIVELY FEAT-URES THAT WERE PROMISED.

A Mass of Testimony Introduced, All Sustaining the Charges, of Which There Are Seven Separate Counts.

The hearing of the charges preferre against George W. Pearsons, suspended chief engineer of the water works, began at 0 a. m. yesterday before Mayor Jones, City Counselor Middlebrook and Speaker Smith of the lower house. The board was repre-sented by Superintendent Longwell, of the water works department, while Mr. Pearsons looked after his own interests. Those who expected a redhot time were disappointed, for the entire proceedings were of decidedly prosaic character.

The charges, which were read at the outset, contained seven counts. After the recital of the removal of Mr. Pearsons by the board of public works, on November 12, the subordination shown to the superintendent of the water works department, in that he failed to obey the superintendent's orders requiring him to give all orders to the men working at Quindaro through the princip engineer, John F. Sickles, so that there might be a head to the work at that point during his absence; that he stated to said Sickles he got his orders from President Graham, and he did not care what the superintendent said.

Second-That he had been guilty of insubordination and neglect of duty toward the board of public works in that at divers repeatedly refused and failed to attend the neetings of the board, as requested by it. Third-That he had shown himself incompetent to fill the position he did; that he had himself and permitted others to do careless and unsubstantial work on the Quindaro Fourth-That he permitted gumbo to be put in the banks and permitted it to remain there without notifying the superintendent of the board, thus causing the bank to of the board, thus causing the bank to slide and cave in.

Fifth—That he, knowing the statement to be untrue, deceived and misled the superintendent of water works and the board of public works by stating to them that there was no gumbo in any of the banks except that put in by Mr. Sickles in the repair of the north bank, while gumbo was discovered elsewhere.

Sixth—That he had shown himself incompetent and an unsufe person to hold the Sixth—That he had shown himself incompetent and an unsafe person to hold the position he did, knowing the original faulty construction of the basins and concealing the facts from the board; and further for attempting in recent repairs of the basins to use and advise the use of defective and unsafe cement and other materials, which, if used, would have resulted in great loss to the city and have been a menace to the lives of the men employed on the Quindaro basins.

Seventh—That he has shown himself in lives of the men employed on the Quindaro basins.

Seventh—That he has shown himself incompetent and an unsafe adviser, and an improper person to hold his position, in that he had advised and recommended the purchase of a low steam pressure pump and boilers when, in fact, all modern water works machinery now erected is of high pressure type: that his advice, if taken, would have been to the detriment of the department and the city.

Mr. Pearsons pleaded not guilty to each and all of the charges.

Mr. George J. Baer, of the board of public works, was the first witness. He told of the unanimous election to the position of Mr. Pearsons. He then had implicit confidence in him, but in going about the works soon found everything in a disorganized and unsatisfactory shape. It was the emptying of a basin at Quindaro that had disgusted him. The defect in the work there as exposed was little short of criminal, he said. Mr. Baer then testified in detail to the extent of these defects, showing the use of stones of all sizes in construction, as well as the existence of gumbo and dirt in place of cement in the work. Concluding, he told in detail about the advocacy of the low pressure steam pump boilers by Mr. Pearsons.

Interrogated by Mayor Jones, Mr. Baer said that Pearsons had superintended the original construction of the Quindaro dams; that the construction of the plers over Jersey creek was also bad. As an official, he had recommended the removal of Mr. Pearsons.

Mr. Youmans, of the board, testified, corof Mr. Pearsons.

Mr. Youmans, of the board, testified, corroborating Mr. Baer and stating that there was material used wholly unfit for the foundations of ordinary houses, much less for work of that character. In the progress of his testimony, Mr. Youmans said:

foundations of ordinary houses, much less for work of that character. In the progress of his testimony, Mr. Youmans said: "I don't believe all this poor work resulted from ignorance on the part of Mr. Pearsons, but simply for the reason that he preferred to do slipshod work. It would seem that the walls were built in such a way as to insure their falling down at some not too far distant time."

Mr. Hardesty, of the board, was not a stonemason nor a civil nor hydraulic engineer, still he had been to Quindaro and the defects in the work were patent to a layman. Defects in it had been plastered over with a view to hiding them, evidently, Joseph L. Chapman, engineer at the Turkey creek station since 1874, testified to the antagonism by Pearsons of his superiors and vindicated the wisdom of the orders of the latter. He particularly adverted to the advocacy of the low pressure boilers by Pearsons condemning him for it.

James Stanley, foreman of the stonework at Quindaro, told how Pearsons had instructed him not to take too much pains with the work. Said he: "In tearing down the ofd wall we found loose dry stones thrown in, and also dry cement that had seemingly been poured in, while in parts of the work no mortar had been used at ali."

Engineer Sickles testified to the insubor Engineer sickles testined to the insubordinate act of Pearsons in disobeying Longwell's orders and giving orders to the men over the superintendent's head.

William L. Sheppard testified to the weak condition of the walls and the apparent trifling character of the work done at Quindaro. He was corroborated by other witnesses.

caro. He was corroborated by other witnesses.

Mr. Lynch, a stonemason, told how, in the construction of the dams, dry stone had been freely used in his presence, as a wager was un touching the amount of work that could be done in a day.

Other witnesses told of hollow walls in the work, and how a section of it over 200 feet in length had washed away within a few months of its original completion.

Letters were then introduced to show that Pearsons had made contradictory statements touching the Quindaro work, after which Mr. Longwell announced that he was through. after which Mr. Longwell announced that he was through.
"Do you wish to take the stand?" asked Mayor Jones.
"No," said Mr. Longwell. "for my testimony would only be corroborative of that of the witnesses already examined."
Mr. Pearsons announced that he would like a brief postponement of the hearing prior to the presentation of his defense, and it was finally agreed to adjourn until 10 o'clock Friday morning.
During the hearing Mr. Pearsons asked but few questions, contenting himself with taking notes.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

Distilleries in This District Not Turning Out Whisky as in Former Days.

The manufacture of whisky in this revenue district has not been carried on very largely during the past year, but the indications are that an increased activity may be looked for during the winter. There are fifty-five distilleries in the district. During the summer they were so well stocked up that for a time only one was in operation. It was at California, and has a capacity somewhat larger than many of the others. The progress of the times makes it harder each year for the little distilleries to run at a profit and compete with the goods sent out by the larger houses. There are but eight of the fifty-five running in this district now, but a dozen others have notified the department they would start up for a short run next month.

There are now stored in the warehouses connected with the distilleries 286,788 gallons of liquor of the approved color and age to go on the market. That is a large supply for the trade of the district that is secured by the local distillers. They are making strong efforts to dispose of the surplus. In former years there was an active demand for the product, and they were able to dispose of their goods very largely at home, but since the jug houses of the city have looked so carefully after country trade the small distillers have suffered.

Just at present there is very little if any "moonshine" goods being made in the district. Four years ago, when the "moon-

Four years ago, when the "moonshiners" of Georgia and Mississippi were run out of those states, they flocked into the Ozark mountains in large numbers, and before the officers were able to get at them they had flooded the mountain country with jugs and barrels of their illicit product, and had sent much of it into the Indian country. The revenue officials have gone after them in connection with the deputy marshals with such energy that more than a dozen are now in jail serving time and half a dozen stills have been destroyed, and several men have been badly of the stroyed, and several men have been badly of the stroyed. stroyed, and several men have been bas shot in trying to dispute the authority the officers
